'Little bit' of history made

A little bit of history was made Monday at Appomattox County High School, as an innovative program linking ACHS vocational education students and Central Virginia Community College was signed into effect.

The program will allow graduating seniors at ACHS to transfer as credit courses they have taken in auto mechanics, drafting, and electricity and electronics.

Appomattox is one of five school divisions which have entered into this agreement, known as an "articulation" planning program with Central Virginia Community College. Lynchburg, Bedford, Amherst, and Campbell school divisions are also participating in the program.

The program seeks to eliminate duplication of studies for vocational education students who enter college to further their studies after high school graduation.

In the program, the teacher evaluates the student to ensure that he or she performs job-related tasks in a competent, efficient manner.

These standards of competency are established by committees consisting of educators and workers in the various vocational fields included in the program.

The committees continually review the various fields of study and update them to ensure that the student is studying aspects of his or her chosen vocation which will be useful in practical application.

And, because the program is coordinated between the high school and CVCC, the student's college curriculum will not include courses which duplicate ones already taken by the student in high school.

The program is the first of its type in Virginia and may become a standard nationwide in years to come.

At formal ceremonies on Monday, Richard Carter, director of vocational education in Appomattox, pointed out that participating students in Appomattox County are getting in on the ground floor of what will likely become a standard educational procedure in the future.

Dr. Roger Beeker, chairman of the Engineering Technology Division of CVCC, was on hand to participate in the ceremonies, as was Lloyd Walton, superintendent of schools in Appomattox; Don Armentrout, principal of ACHS; Keith Maxey, ACHS Auto Mechanics teacher; Harold Brizendine, drafting teacher, and Dexter Andrews, electricity and electronics teacher.

Open house planned

AN OPEN HOUSE at the new Appomattox County jail located behind the County Courthouse is scheduled for May 10 from 1 p.m. to 4 p.m. Sheriff Gene Richardson invites all county citizens to come by and see the new facility, which has the capicity to house a total of 22 inmates. The $280,000 facility will save the county approximately $80,000 per year in the cost of housing prisoners in neighboring jurisdictions' jails, according to Richardson. (Photo by Bill Sherrod)

Bowman finds challenges at AES

By FRANCES H. PAULETTE

"What we do at school has to be complemented by what is done at home and vice-versa; it is necessary for both home and school to work together. I believe success will come naturally when there is cooperation between teachers-school and pupil-parents," says Tom Bowman, Principal of the Appomattox Elementary School since the beginning of the 1980-81 school term last fall.

Before coming to Appomattox, Bowman was teacher-coordinator for the gifted and talented program in the Northhampton County School system for four years. He is a native of Accomac, Virginia and is a graduate of Wesleyan College, Norfolk, and did his graduate work at Salisbury State College in Maryland. He has taken additional classes at the University of Virginia and the Old Dominion University.

With a total enrollment today of 762 the Appomattox Elementary School teaches grades three through six and also offers classes in special education for the Hearing Impaired, Educable Mentally Retarded, the Emotionally Disturbed, Learning Disabled, Speech Handicapped, Orthopedically Impaired and for the Gifted and Talented.

"I believe in individualized education for children, those at both ends of the scale, both top and bottom," commented Bowman as he spoke of the dedication of the teachers at AES.

Appomattox Elementary School had its beginning during the 1929-30 school year when plans were initiated for the school. The bid was let by the local school board under the leadership of the Rev. A. E. Jordan. The funding program for this building was organized by Mrs. Mozella J. Price, Appomattox County Supervisor of Negro Schools, and extended over a period of several years.

The new brick building, named Appomattox County Training School, was dedicated in May of 1930. The 1930-31 fall term opened with the late Rev. A. E. Jordan as principal. Seventy five pupils were enrolled at the beginning of the term. The enrollment increased as the one-room schools in the county were closed, and teachers and students were transferred to the Appomattox County Training School.

Using two buildings, the 1932-33 session of the Appomattox County Training School opened with four teachers. The old three-room elementary school was renovated into a new agricultural department under the direction of the Rev. R. Q. Lawing. The Works Progress Administration (WPA) constructed a new agriculture building which was used for several years.

The Rev. Jordan developed the school's first football team, pole vaulting team, track and high jumping teams.

The Home Economics Department was developed by the elementary teachers who included sewing and cooking in their curriculum. A new department was built in the early 1940's. It was in May of 1933 that the first graduation exercise was held.

The present building was completed in 1950-51. Upon approval of the School Board, the name of the school was changed to Carver-Price High School at the dedication exercises in 1952 in honor of Mrs. M. J. Price, Supervisor.

The county school officials planned reorganization procedures which brought about unification in the schools in February of 1970. The buildings which had been known as Carver-Price High School became Appomattox Intermediate School, housing grades five through nine. Mr. Beamon, who was principal of Carver-Price High School, continued in that position in the newly organized intermediate school. Mr. Daniel W. Davis served as principal during the 1973-74 session.

During the summer of 1974, all the county schools were reorganized as a result of the opening of the new Appomattox County High School. Grades seven through nine of the Appomattox Intermediate School were transferred to other schools, leaving grades five and six. The formation of Appomattox Elementary School was the result of combing grades five and six with grades three and four which had previously been included at Appomattox Primary School. Mr. Robert Williamson became principal. Mr. Terry Quesenberry was principal for the 1979-1980 school term.

Bowman, present principal believes that people have a tendency to underestimate the power of education. "It's not so much the quantity of education that a child receives but the quality of the education that matters," commented the principal who spends at least three or four hours each week reading educational journals. "I have to keep up with all the things that are being done in the field of education; it's so exciting."

Teacher-principal is the term Bowman used to describe how he feels about his position. "Of all the hats I wear, the teacher-instructor hat is the one I like best of all....it's my Fedora!"

Bowman, who believes it is important that parents keep informed on the progress (or lack of progress, as the case may be) of their children, spends one evening each week at the school in order to meet with parents.

"I invite parents to observe their child in class," says Bowman, "I want them to be interested and informed. I have met some great parents in this county, and found them to be most cooperative."

In speaking of the standards he sets for the teachers in the AES and himself, Bowman has this to say, "I don't want to appear rigid but I don't compromise my standards. My teachers are very important to me. They understand what I expect of them and what I expect of myself. I may expect a lot of the teachers but no more than I expect of myself. I believe if quality starts at the top, it goes all the way down; I believe in Appomattox County School Division, quality does start at the top."

Warner to speak in Buckingham

Senator John Warner is scheduled to be Parade Marshal and Principal Speaker at Buckingham County Day on Saturday, May 9.

This is the seventh annual Buckingham County Day, sponsored by the Buckingham County Lions Club.

In addition to Senator Warner, many local dignitaries from Buckingham and surrounding counties are expected to attend. An all day program has been arranged, starting with the parade at 10:00 a.m. All festivities will take place at the Buckingham County High School, located on Route 60 near Sprouse Corner.

With a "Farm and Home" theme, displays and exhibits will feature products and equipment for the farm and rural home, plus arts and crafts, antiques, military equipment. Musical entertainment will be provided; lunches of fried chicken, Brunswick stew, or hamburgers will be available. For the youngsters there will be rides, old-fashioned cotton candy and popcorn.

According to Lion President Edward LeSueur, an attendance in excess of three thousand is expected.

Spring loses battles, but eventually is a winner. Sunday morning had the lowest thermometer reading of April, but there was a warm-up and one's only weather complaint is that we could use some rain. Driving through town saw a garden with two long rows of strawberry plants in bloom. Yes, it is that time of year.

Early Sunday morning a gentleman and lady were in a car in front of our post office when I went for mail. They asked if there was a place named "Oakville" and how to get there. Better to show than explain, so I told them to follow my car and I got em out of town on the right road to Oakville.

Top event of the week in Virginia will be the May 2 visit of England's Prince Charles to Williamsburg. Eighty Very Important People have been invited to greet him at a luncheon in William and Mary's Wren Building. No one from Martha Street on the guest list and the only thing lacking on the announced menu will be Virginia Ham. Chesapeake Bay crab is the starter. A welcome Red Carpet to Britain's future King.

Saturday will be Derby Day, the 107th annual running of The Kentucky Derby. Sports attention will be focused on The Blue Grass State.

Pastor and Mrs. G. Edward Hughes were honored recently by Red Oak Baptist Church on the occasion of retirement after forty years of service in the ministry. They will now live in Highland Springs. I have not seen Rev. Hughes for some years, but recall I used to greet him as "General Electric" because of the initials G. E. Best of everything to these fine people.

Mrs. Rachel Lawson is a highly valued friend. Just returned from a plane trip to Ohio she brought me a copy of United Airlines magazine and a Airlines Friendship Store catalog. Neatest item in the catalog was a pair of earrings, about the size of a penny, marked "In" and "Out" for those who believe in the old saying "In one ear and out the other." Thanks for interesting reading.

It is NOT good news that latest figures show Virginia's 1981 highway deaths at twenty more than at this time last year.

Usually takes me a week to get, adjusted to the semi-annual changing of clocks. Seems to me that Benjamin Franklin started Daylight Saving Time. Anyway, the world does look nice early pearly in the morning.

Another gardening item. I read that it is good to have a toad frog or two around as they feast on a variety of insects. Suits me for already I have been assaulted by gnats. Oil of Citronella helps. Gardening comment: one object of the game of gardening is to grow'em as pretty as the pictures on the seed packets.

Cancer month ending

April has been Cancer Control Month.....have you contributed?

Cancer is the major health fear of Americans. One out of every four Virginians will have cancer in their lifetime; 17,000 will develop cancer and 8,700 will die of this disease in 1981.....these are figures compiled by the American Cancer Society, Virginia Division, Inc. Yet, what a lot of people don't know is that "cancer is one of the most curable chronic disease in the country today. Our ability to cure cancer is a relatively recent achievement and it improves each year," according to facts published in March of this year by the Cancer Society.

The two million Americans and 46,800 Virginians cured of cancer realize the importance of giving to support local cancer education, research and service programs.

In Appomattox County five people have been visited by the Reach-To-Recovery Program; four people in the county have received Emergency Financial Assistance. Five people in this county have received money for traveling to and from the doctor's office and hospital for treatment and three people from our county have received help from various service groups; all of this through American Cancer Society.

CanSurmount, based on hope, is a group of volunteers trained by the American Cancer Society to visit and counsel individuals who have cancer or family members who are living and working with cancer victims.

CanSurmount also acts as a Resources Group; if there is help or information that they cannot provide, the group acts as a guide in helping a cancer victim or family member get the help they need from the proper source.

When we give, we "Share-The-Cost-Of-Living" by making possible more and more research, and that's what it will take to conquer cancer.'

Heart fund total at 62% of goal

As of March 31, with some funds yet to come in, the Appomattox Unit of the American Cancer Society had reached 62 percent of its goal, according to County Chairman, Mrs. Debbie Powell.

Mrs. Powell points out that anyone wishing to make a memorial contribution to the American Heart Association may do so locally by contacting Delores Hopkins, at 352-5474 (if no answer, call 376-3878).

Mrs. Powell said this week that "We appreciate all the help from the volunteers collecting for the Heart" Association. If there are any additional contributions to be made contact Mrs. Jean LeGrand at Central Fidelity Bank, Hillcrest Branch."

THE APPOMATTOX COUNTY DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION, at a dinner meeting held at Maude's Restaurant on Tuesday evening, April 21,elected Dr. J. A. Mathews as president for the coming year; Robert A. Sears, vice-president; Mrs. Barbara Williams, secretary, and John Harrison, treasurer. Directors elected for a two-year period were: Herbert Chambers, Floyd Williams, Robert A. Sears, John Harrison and Martin Webb. Directors with one year left to serve are: Dr. J. A. Mathews, Horace Coleman, Bruce Cowan, and Barbara Williams. William H.
